During the insurgency in northern Uganda, Otim and his peers were abducted by the rebels and taken into rebel camps and trained to fight the government while Joyce and Catherine were used to provide labour to the rebel commanders. As rebels they killed and looted items in the village. They performed these tasks without question to avoid being killed by the senior officers. They served as target of terror against their families and communities for all the time they spent. Otim later escaped from rebel captivity back home and he has suffered poverty and stigmatization.

- (b) As a student of history and political education, write an essay pointing out ways how the government can avoid such conflicts.
